My Big Chance

I was sitting on a bench at my favorite place, the Washington Monument, wasting whatever time I had, but then my phone rang. "Hello?" I answered.

"Come to my office at 4:00 p.m." the caller said.

I glanced at the caller ID. and said "Yes, anything for you President Obama, sir!"

I rushed to the president's office and sat in a large chair.

"Thank you for coming," President Obama said.

"No problem, I had nothing planned," I said.

"I need you to have your invention ready in two days," President Obama said.

"Sure," I said.

"We'll discuss with the technical leader of Japan, your invention may be used in Japan, " President Obama said.

"Really!" I exclaimed.

"Really," he responded.

"I'll be in my office," I said.

I arrived in my office and continued working on my invention. Now it was a scrap of metal and wires, but later It'll be one of the greatest inventions ever made.

"Ok, this wire goes here and this wire goes there," I muttered, "Just this one wire left, and done!" I said as I was calling the President telling him I was done.

We met with the technical leader and discussed the invention.

"I like it and I want them in Japan," said the technical leader.

"Thank you, sir!" I said.

"We'll get workers to build more," President Obama said.

"But first, what do you call it?" said the technical leader.

"The Geo phone," I said.

"Well lets get these out!" said the President.

"Ok!" I exclaimed!"
