One morning the president of the United States fired his right hand man. Because he wasn't keeping him connected to the people. So I applied for the job and my name is Gunner Sakich. When I applied they checked me completely it was liked they were doing a search and destroy mission. Then I walked into a giant hall. There at the end was two men dressed in black. There was no door, looked like they were guarding a door. Then it opened for me and there was the president, sitting on big fancy chair talking on the phone with someone. Then he put the phone on the receiver and said, "Are you here for the job?" I shook my head yes and said, "Yes sir." Then he told me to go to the Technology room. I asked for directions but that didn't go so well people were so quiet and then I met this General. He told me to go ask someone else and I told him I've asked over a million people. He pointed toward a door and it said "Technology room!" I told him thank you and he said nothing back. So I went into the room and there was a lot of tech. Then a man came out of nowhere and told me about all the tech. Then I started the next day. Then we went to China. At that time there was a major problem, the Army needed to talk to the president.
