

Presidential Communications

Essay

If I were the communication expert for the president I would create a device that would be named the L.P.A.W. S. The longer powered all purpose website. The president would barely ever have to charge his phone. It would be a communication device that would be a computer, a phone, and a live view camera. President Obama would send the phone to the American people and send his blog to every state to see how the American people liked it. Once all the blog results came back from the states they would report to the president. The blog results would tell the president what the American people thought and if it was ok he would send America the devices to the people and have 100 shipped out every day. The phone would be a awesome turn in history. Everyone would want one. The president would be famous for ever and have all technology in his finger tips. Anyone could see the latest updates, live view videos and could have a say in what the government decided on no matter what. The government could finnaly see what the American people really wanted and decide what everyone wanted and post every new law, and update that the government had. All of America would be happy and the president of the United States which is Obama would be known forever. With that kind of technology America could feel safer more in touch and that is my presentation of what a new kind of technology for the president would be like.

By: Blaine Mitchell

Blaine Mitchell #1